“It's probably not a good idea to be chewing on a toothpick if you're talking to the president, because what if he tells a funny joke and you laugh so hard you spit the toothpick out and it hits him in the face or something.”

TABLE TALK

A half-eaten slice of elderly cheese on toast purportedly showing the image of the Virgin Mary has attracted 100,000 hits on the eBay auction website. Ebay officials initially suspected that the item was a hoax and withdrew it from the website. But Florida resident Diana Duyser, 52, is insistent that the sandwich offer is genuine and that the item has brought her great luck for the last 10 years. The item is now back on the site with the starting price of $3,000. Bids have now reached $99.9m, though officials suspect it to be a prank.

Duyser says that for the last ten years it has not shown any sign of mould or crumbling - which she considers "a miracle”. She also believes its mystical properties have brought her blessings including $70,000 won in a nearby casino.

"I made this sandwich 10 years ago. When I took a bite out of it, I saw a face looking up at me - it was Virgin Mary starring (sic) back at me. I was in total shock," she explained.

Mrs Duyser has since kept the toastie surrounded by cotton wool, in a plastic container on a stand.

She added, "I would like all bidders to know that this item is not intended for consumption."

STOMP is a movement, of bodies, objects, sounds - even abstract ideas. The cast uses everyday objects in non-traditional ways, taking the ordinary sounds of pipes and brooms, lighters and garbage pail lids, and creating the extraordinary.

Luke Cresswell and Steve McNicholas, the creators of STOMP, got the idea from their earlier days in England when they were street performers, or more commonly know as "buskers." There's no speech, no dialogue, not even a plot, but there's plenty of motion, music and magic.
