Have you been half asleep and have you heard voices?
I've heard them calling my name
Is this the sweet sound that calls young sailors
The voice might be one and the same

I've heard it too many time to ignore it
It's something that I'm s'posed to be

Someday we'll find it, the Rainbow Connection
The lovers, the dreamers, and me
—Kermit the Frog

TABLE TALK

Thursday March 10, 2005

A burro named Pacho spurred a heated debate over animal rights in Columbia. Pacho had been pulling a cart through the city of Arauca all day. When night fell a drunken motorcyclists hit him. Instead of the owner being arrested for his part in the accident, Pacho was arrested.

Alvaro Merchan, an animal rights activist, agreed to take the case. Merchan said, “They are violating a burro’s right to due process”. He was also upset that Pacho, who was being housed at the local fire station, was not being properly housed or guarded.

Owner, Nelson Gonzalez, was very firm about his donkey’s innocence and says that visiting Pacho has become very hard. “He is very sad when he sees me and begins to bray, like he is telling me he is innocent and asking me to get him out of this place that is not his home”, Gonzalez claimed.

The case does have a happy ending, because of the outcry of the Columbian people Pacho was allowed to go free.
