Kids, you tried your best and you failed miserably. The lesson is, never try.

—Homer Simpson

Last Friday, a five year old girl was arrested from her Florida kindergarten. She was actually cuffed and placed in the back of the cruiser. According to her teacher, the class was counting jelly beans as a math exercise when the child started acting silly. When the teacher took her jelly beans away, she started throwing boxes and books, kicked her teacher in the shin, punched an assistant principal in the stomach, broke a candy dish, and then proceeded to draw on the walls.

Soon after her outburst, the girl was arrested and charged with battery. Her hands were bound with plastic ties and her ankles were in cuffs. No charges were actually filed and the girl soon got to go home with her mother.

While the police felt that appropriate action was taken but the girl’s mother, Inda Atkins, and the school do not agree. She is currently consulting an attorney. She was quoted as saying, “She’s never going back to that school. They set my baby up.”

The girl was been punished by the school but extreme action was not taken since she was only a kindergartener.

Speaking with a Forked Tongue: a Reading of Bilingual Literature

Sponsored by the Hendrix–Murphy Foundation

You are invited to participate in the reading of bilingual Spanish and English literature. This literature is growing in popularity in the U.S. due to the growing Hispanic population. This population currently resides in a miniature chaos: although it is clearly American, it is also Hispanic. This population is neither native nor foreign. It has no home or first language. A third American, a third Hispanic, and a third confusion between the two, the culture, and the literature reflect the chaos from which they come.

When: Tuesday, March 22 at 6:00 p.m.
Where: Murphy Seminar room
Refreshments will be served.
