TABLE TALK

Monday, March 28, 2005

Sam Kimery, from Tulsa OK, has created a Fox News blocker. Kimery has already sold about 100 of his newly invented machines. They are tiny bits of metal that screw into the back of your television, blocking only Fox News.

Kimery was formerly a registered Republican but felt the party quit listening to the needs of its members. He now identifies himself as an independent.

Kimery feels that Fox News is bias and he might as well “be reading tabloids out of the grocery store.” He sees his action as more than preventing people from watching Fox News. He sees it more as a symbolic action, like burning a draft card. In fact, a letter of complaint addressed to Fox News comes with the channel blocker. The purchaser can choose whether or not to send it to Fox.

Fox only responded by saying that their ratings are higher than many other news channels and are not bothered by Mr. Kimery’s invention.

Kimery does not use the blocker himself. He likes to tune into Fox when he wants to see something “especially heinous”.

How do you make the invisible visible?
You take it away.

What happens to those left behind?
