A gym in Portugal is urging its patrons to drink beer as part of a health diet campaign sponsored by the nation's main association of producers of beer.

According to the Association of Beer Producers, 20,000 flyers outlining the health benefits of a two beer a day diet will be passed out to people entering gyms in Lisbon and Oporto.

The fliers, which have a woman jumping rope beside a giant glass of beer, claims that a six fluid ounce glass of beer has less calories than a quarter pint glass of sugar free orange juice or the same size cup of milk.

It read, “Forget the myth of the ‘beer gut’ because it is just that; a myth”.

The Association of Beer Producers says it is trying to, “draw attention to some less well-known aspects of beer, such as its agricultural origins, its nutritional value and health benefits when drunk in moderation and responsibly”.

Your grandma fainted when she saw him.

In the heyday of silent movies, musicians in the theater helped set the mood for the on-screen action. Dr. David Briggs, Organist Emeritus at Gloucester Cathedral, will recreate the experience with improvised organ music during a free showing of The Phantom of the Opera, starring Lon Chaney.
